

College Game Plan

Going to college is a big must for me because I want to play college and professional sports or what I would major in is culinary art to become a chef this is a life long dream I have had and I want to be able to let my parents retire

The first Reason I want to go to college is to play collegiate sports. After I want to play professional football. If I go to college then professional teams will come to see me play so they would come to watch my talent and see if I'm good enough for one of their draft picks. To even go to college, the only degree I would need is a high school diploma. If I'm good enough at this sport, I would only attend college for 3 years and hopefully reach the dream of a NFL player. I already have high schools wanting me to come up to see there facilities,so I hope at the next level it would be the same.

The second reason I want to go to college is to become a chef for a kitchen or a personal chef either one would be great. I love cooking and I would like to help people explore more exotic foods. Being a chef I want to make crazy unimaginable foods and different recipes . A Chef is just a hobby for me now, but if football doesn't work out I would go into being a chef. I watched a lot of Gordon Ramsey growing up and I would watch my family cook. Just watching them cook anything is a great childhood memory of mine. I would soak it all up and I watched so many times that it would just be locked in my mind. I loved every moment of it. My favorite thing to cook is probably crab legs. I like to try different spices and add little things in and I like to boil them and grill them. I tried to fry them once but it didn't go so well because it was my first time. My family is all around the world so I try and visit the ones who are in different countries so I can learn how to cook in different countries. That is why I was saying I want to make different dishes and unimaginable creations for either a kitchen or being a personal chef to show my love for being a chef and cooking but it's really still my second option.

my third reason I want to go to college is to put my family especially my mother, in a stable financial position so she won't have to work the rest of her life. She won't have to take care of me and have to take care of my brother because she's already done a lot for me. At this little point in my life she does a lot of high school visits, lots of meeting, and coaches and teachers messaging her, plus taking care of my little brother. That's puts a lot of pressure on her. At this point of me growing up and going to high school, then getting actual college offers would put even more stress on her, so I want to make it to the professional level and watch as my mom relax and watch me live out my dream and her dream of seeing me play at that level.

To conclude, my story I would want to go to college for life lessons and to live dreams but I want to make them a reality and help my family by giving them anything that they could imagine. If my plan A does not work then I would have a plan B to fall back on, and my family will eat very well!
